

“Song In My Tummy”

How to use the song:

- Use this song to mix movement and body awareness. Have students move or point to each body part as they hear it in the song.
- Ask students what some body parts not mentioned in the song might sound like to develop curiosity and imaginative thinking. Encourage students to use their voices as well as classroom materials to create the sounds!

Remix It!

If you have a music center in your classroom, use this activity as an opportunity to introduce new instruments and make new sounds!

Berkner Bytes

The LAURIE
BERKNER
BAND

“Take A Look At My Face”

How to use the song:

- Pair this song with an emotions guessing game. Have students guess what emotion the teacher is communicating with their face.
- Have students hold a scarf in front of their faces. On "Just take a look at my face," have the students pull down their scarves to reveal the emotion on their faces.

Remix It!

Extend the learning by having students create faces that represent various emotions from loose materials such as play-dough, popsicle sticks, and buttons.

Berkner Bytes

The LAURIE
BERKNER
BAND

“Look At All The Letters”

How to use the song:

- Let's go looking for letters! Give each child one letter to find printed in the classroom. Students may look at labels, book titles, or posters.
- For the length of the song, students will move about the classroom to find their assigned letter.

Remix It:

This activity can also be adapted as a book hunt. Have students look for one letter in a book. If your curriculum encourages letter of the week, this could be a weekly routine for each letter!

Berkner Bytes

The LAURIE
BERKNER
BAND

“12 Months”

How to use the song:

- At the beginning of the month, introduce an anchor chart or poster listing the 12 months. Have students cheer when the current month is sung.
- Discuss holidays, weather, and events for each month. Then, have students decorate a group poster with relevant images for each month.

Remix It:

For younger students, a new month can be exciting! Instead of having them draw a poster, use relevant printed images to create a group collage for the month.

Berkner Bytes

The LAURIE
BERKNER
BAND

“Song In My Tummy”

How to use the song:

- Use this song to mix movement and body awareness. Have students move or point to each body part as they hear it in the song.
- Ask students what some body parts not mentioned in the song might sound like to develop curiosity and imaginative thinking. Encourage students to use their voices as well as classroom materials to create the sounds!

Remix It!

If you have a music center in your classroom, use this activity as an opportunity to introduce new instruments and make new sounds!

“Take A Look At My Face”

How to use the song:

- Pair this song with an emotions guessing game. Have students guess what emotion the teacher is communicating with their face.
- Have students hold a scarf in front of their faces. On "Just take a look at my face," have the students pull down their scarves to reveal the emotion on their faces.

Remix It!

Extend the learning by having students create faces that represent various emotions from loose materials such as play-dough, popsicle sticks, and buttons.

“Look At All The Letters”

How to use the song:

- Let’s go looking for letters! Give each child one letter to find printed in the classroom. Students may look at labels, book titles, or posters.
- For the length of the song, students will move about the classroom to find their assigned letter.

Remix It:

This activity can also be adapted as a book hunt. Have students look for one letter in a book. If your curriculum encourages letter of the week, this could be a weekly routine for each letter!

“12 Months”

How to use the song:

- At the beginning of the month, introduce an anchor chart or poster listing the 12 months. Have students cheer when the current month is sung.
- Discuss holidays, weather, and events for each month. Then, have students decorate a group poster with relevant images for each month.

Remix It:

For younger students, a new month can be exciting! Instead of having them draw a poster, use relevant printed images to create a group collage for the month.